About the Book

Garnering rave reviews for her wickedly fun novels, Beth Kendrick always finds a fresh take on the laws of attraction. Now she tackles the laws of retraction in a rollicking ride through Mayfair Estates, a swanky gated community where no one says "I do" without signing on the dotted line first. But for three Mayfair couples, the pre-nup causes more woes than windfalls. When Ellie's Prince Charming turns out to be a cheater, she discovers that a man who is good at hiding his affair will be even better at hiding his assets. A successful attorney, Mara still hasn't walked down the aisle with her fiancée, Josh. She's giving the pre-nup and her wedding dress equally careful attention --- until Josh dredges up a foolish one-night fling from her past. Insisting on a "cheating clause," he unleashes a question of trust that neither of them is ready to face. Jen and Eric signed a pre-nup that put her business on the line. When the company suddenly takes off, so does Eric - forcing her to admit how much she loves him, with or without his bankroll. Ellie, Mara, and Jen may have rocky relationships, but they're about to find out just how priceless friendship can be.

9. In the twenty-first century, do most men and women enter marriage on equal financial footing? If not, what accounts for the differences? Do modern divorced women deserve alimony, or was alimony only necessary when few women attended college or launched a career?
