Unmastered: A Book on Desire, Most Difficult to Tell
by Katherine Angel

About the Book

In the tradition of Susan Sontag and Virginia Woolf, Katherine Angel's UNMASTERED forges a path through cliché, convention, and secrecy to examine the gorgeous puzzle of sexuality. We’re told that women now have more access to their sexuality than ever before, and yet, in some ways, we are still too constrained to voice --- or even recognize --- our own wants. What we desire, Angel finds, is a crosscurrent running beneath what we think and say and know.

Through Angel's scholarly investigations of sex and her own personal experiences, UNMASTERED examines the fierce appetites that ebb and flow in us: for power and for pliancy; for liberation and for connection. It anatomizes desire and pleasure, joy and suffering. Reveling in the elusiveness of easy answers, UNMASTERED opens a space to talk about the things we often believe cannot be bounded by words.

The result is a searching, erotic work that shifts in meaning and resonance even as it is read. Lyrical, brave, and sometimes disarmingly funny, UNMASTERED will start a thousand debates.

Discussion Guide

1. In what ways did the book change the way you think about desire and identity? Which passages resonated the most for you? Which made you feel uncomfortable? Did any make you feel relief? Joy? Pleasure? Anger?

2. How do cultural norms shape sexuality? And how does this book challenge or reinforce those norms? How does the way we talk about sexuality influence our understanding of it?
3. What does the book reveal about the dynamic between the masculine and the feminine—in terms of control, of anatomy, of behavior, of expectations?

4. In what ways do the author’s experiences of joy and grief, pleasure and pain, correspond to one another? Describe the different manifestations of intensity and extremes in the book. Can you draw parallels to your own life?

5. How was your reaction to UNMASTERED shaped by the fact that it is a work of nonfiction, written by a scholar of sexuality and culture? Would your response be different if it were a memoir written by a novelist? Can you imagine reading something similar, written by a man? A mother? A lesbian?

6. The book interweaves segments of extremely personal confession with cinematic scenes and lines that feel more like poetry. How does this structure influence your experience of the book? How does it affect pace and emphasis? Do you see a relationship between the form and the author’s development, between the form and the argument the book seeks to make? How does the form enact claims that the author makes?

7. How do the author’s romantic relationships influence her perceptions of reality? Does that influence change over the course of the book? How?

8. How does the book explore the relationship between our sexual selves and our family life?

9. In what ways has the book articulated or changed your idea of feminism? How does the author reconcile her definition of feminism with her status as an object of desire? Beyond physical gratification, what does sex deliver for the narrator and for the man she loves? What does it mean to be a “Dupe. Collaborator. Victim” (page 171)?

10. How would you respond to the author’s question on page 174: “Am I pornography?” Do you agree with her assertion that pornography endlessly affirms male potency? Is that wrong?

11. What does the book say about our attempts to use storytelling and written words to capture a highly emotional experience? How do we communicate desire? What does it mean to be taken at your word? What are the implications of a “safe word”?

12. Discuss the revelations in “Left Almost Mute,” which begins on page 235. What choices would you make in a similar situation? What aspects of the author’s body and mind are revealed to her at this crossroad?

13. Which of the book’s literary quotations resonated with you the most? How do Virginia Woolf and Susan Sontag reflect womanhood as it was experienced during their lifetimes? What timeless, universal aspects of womanhood are captured in their words?

14. What does the book’s title indicate about mastering another person, mastering oneself, or resisting being mastered? What does it say about the relationship between sex and power? What makes the author’s narrative “most difficult to tell”?
15. What did the book help you discover about the difference between coercion and “coming safely into port”? Which approach is more likely to propel desire?

16. What is the impact of the book’s closing lines? Do they indicate progress or destruction?

17. How do we know what our desire is? How does the author identify what she wants? Do you know what you desire, and why? What helps you and hinders you in knowing what you want?

18. Is UNMASTERED a book about sex? Or about language about sex?

Author Bio

Katherine Angel holds a research fellowship at Queen Mary, University of London. She received a Ph.D. from the University of Cambridge in 2008 and afterward held a postdoctoral fellowship at the University of Warwick. Her research explores the history of psychiatry and sexuality, and she has written for The Independent, Prospect, and the New Statesman. She lives in London. Visit www.katherineangel.com for more information.

Unmastered: A Book on Desire, Most Difficult to Tell
by Katherine Angel

Publication Date: June 4, 2013
Genres: Women's Studies
Hardcover: 368 pages
Publisher: Farrar, Straus and Giroux
ISBN-10: 0374280401